- Smart: able to think strategically, to work independently and with research capabilities.

What we can offer

This is the chance to develop your creative skills by making communication that makes a real difference. You will join a highly talented global team of change makers, quite a few of who used to be interns here. Working with such a young team with flat hierarchy is demanding but will teach you more than anywhere else and develop your workplace skills.

What is a typical day at Reach for Change?

A typical morning starts around 9am when you arrive to our office in Gamla Stan, the center of Stockholm. You will review your tasks of the day that might include writing newsletters, planning and running events, creating videos and contributing to our campaigns and digital platforms. You will also be put in charge of one red thread project of your own depending of your interests, for example setting up a structure for how we work with social media insight, running a podcast or renewing our webpage. Finally, you will organise with the four other interns fun team activities for the whole team such as breakfasts, fika and afterworks. The day usually finishes at 5pm but work hours are flexible. Each week, you will have a check-in with your supervisor in order to discuss your next steps.
